2. OBJECTIVES AND LEARNING OUTCOMES

Objectives

Present new patterns of consumer behaviour and their marketing implications in the context of environmental change. To provide a complex overview of the factors influencing the behaviour of today's consumers, as well as the mechanism and new phenomena of the purchasing decision process.

Academic results

Knowledge

1. Upon successful completion of the course, students will gain insight into the analytical aspects of consumer and customer behaviour.
2. Students master the key aspects of understanding consumer and customer behaviour, the external and internal influencing factors and the links of the discipline to other marketing disciplines such as brand management, digital marketing, strategic marketing.
3. Understand today's consumers and the new challenges/opportunities that these changes present for marketing.
4. Understand the main theoretical contexts and analytical models that explain consumer and customer behaviour.
5. Gain an overview of new research (e.g. neuromarketing), business models (e.g. sharing economy) and practices (e.g. experiential marketing) aimed at deepening the understanding of consumer and customer behaviour, their applications and how they can be integrated into business strategy.
6. Students will be able to approach and analyse the factors that influence consumer and purchase decisions and to apply modern marketing research methods and findings, including neuromarketing personality typology, attitude research, reference group effects in a structured way.

Skills

1. Students will see the possibilities of applying the knowledge and models of other disciplines (eg psychology, sociology) in order to better understand consumer behaviour.
2. They will be able to evaluate and analyse consumer and customer behaviour using the theories and methods.
3. Students will be able to formulate and comprehend tasks and new approaches which, in their complexity, help to understand the behaviour and decisions of today's consumers and buyers.
4. They will be able to analyse the impact of new opportunities and challenges of digitalisation on consumer behaviour (e.g. real and virtual self, turbo perception) and use the models applicable to these in their research.
5. They will also be able to present their consumer and customer behaviour analysis.

Attitude

1. Students become open to incorporating customer knowledge into marketing decisions at both the strategic and operational levels.
2. They are open and interested in understanding and taking a complex approach to environmental impacts and trends that are reshaping consumer and purchasing behaviour.
3. They are open to integrating research from other disciplines to understand the background to consumer and customer decisions.

Independence and responsibility

1. Students will be able to make suggestions for state-of-the-art marketing solutions based on customer knowledge.
2. Students will be able to explore the links between environmental changes and consumer and purchasing behaviour.
3. They will be able to formulate conclusions and practical proposals for corporate strategy analysis based on an analysis of consumer and customer behaviour.
4. They can take responsibility for their analyses and conclusions, monitor their activities and formulate new proposals if necessary.

Teaching methodology

Lectures, independent and group work.
